Lee Strobel Makes a Case for the Miraculous THE CASE FOR MIRACLES Arrives Easter 2018

New York Times Bestselling Author Unveils Survey Results: Americans and Miracles

Grand Rapids, Mich.— Where do Americans stand on the topic of miracles? How many people have had an experience they can only explain as being a divine intervention? How many believe miracles are possible today?

New York Times bestselling author Lee Strobel commissioned a national scientific survey with Barna Research to gauge American opinions of the miraculous. The survey revealed:

- Half of US adults (51 percent) said they believe that the miracles of the Bible happened as they are described.
- Two out of three Americans (67 percent) said yes when asked whether miracles are possible today – only 15 percent replied saying no.
- Nearly two out of five US adults (38 percent) said they have had an experience they can only explain as being a miracle of God. Applied to the American population as a whole, this would equal 94,792,000 Americans who are convinced that God has performed at least one miracle for them personally.

Strobel was intrigued by these results, and a fresh question burned in his mind: Does a miracle-performing God actually leave his fingerprints on events today? He began researching with leading authorities – skeptics as well as those who believe they have experienced miracles firsthand. Lee Strobel's interviews and conclusions are recounted in a new book, The Case for Miracles: A Journalist Investigates Evidence for the Supernatural.

By looking at both sides of the argument for miraculous claims, Strobel helps readers sort through numerous perspectives. From miraculous events in scripture to contemporary claims of healings and dreams, The Case for Miracles investigates the pros and cons for supernatural intervention. Readers are invited to make up their own minds about the possibility of miracles happening in this day and time. For Strobel, the evidence clearly sides with a God who has interrupted the ordinary course of nature throughout history.

As a former atheist and legal editor of the Chicago Tribune, Strobel has a long history of skepticism about religious matters. He set out more than twenty years ago to find credible evidence that Jesus of Nazareth really was the Son of God. What he found not only profoundly changed his life but also inspired him to pen this perennial bestseller which has sold more than five millions copies to date. The Case for Christ became a New York Times bestseller upon release in 1998 and has continued to impact readers around the globe for almost two decades. Strobel's series of "The Case For" books have collectively sold more than ten million copies.

The launch of The Case for Miracles will be supported with marketing strategies such as a national church simulcast event in March 2018, and national advertising, publicity and social media campaigns. Movie rights for Strobel's new book have been optioned by PureFlix, which recently released their "The Case for Christ" film on DVD and Netflix.
